PROUD MEMBER OF
THE FARM CREDIT SYSTEM

FROM THE PRESIDENT & CEO

As we navigate the ever-evolving landscape of agriculture, it is essential to reflect on the foundational principles that guide our organization. At AgHeritage Farm Credit Services, we are proud to operate as a cooperative, a model that not only supports our farmers but also strengthens our community. Today, I want to share insights into the cooperative principles that drive our mission and vision.

A cooperative is an organization owned and run jointly by its members, who share in the profits or benefits.

Voluntary and Open Membership: Cooperatives are open to all individuals willing to accept the responsibilities of membership.

Democratic Member Control: Members actively participate in setting policies and making decisions. Elected representatives are accountable to the membership, ensuring that the cooperative remains responsive to its members' needs.

Member Economic Participation: Members contribute equitably to the capital of the cooperative. Surpluses are allocated to develop the cooperative, benefit members in proportion to their transactions and support other activities approved by the membership.

Autonomy and Independence: Cooperatives are self-help organizations controlled by their members. Any agreements with other entities or external funding must preserve the cooperative's autonomy.

Education, Training and Information: Cooperatives provide education and training for their members, elected representatives, managers and employees. This empowers everyone to contribute effectively to the cooperative's development.

Cooperation Among Cooperatives: By working together, cooperatives strengthen the cooperative movement and enhance their ability to serve their members. This principle encourages collaboration and mutual support.

Concern for Community: Cooperatives work for the sustainable development of their communities through policies approved by their members. This principle underscores our commitment to social responsibility and community well-being.

Our Commitment to Cooperative Values: At AgHeritage, we embody these principles in our operations. Our Patronage Program, which returns a portion of our net earnings to eligible customer-owners, is a testament to our commitment to member economic participation. By reinvesting in our community, we ensure that our farmers and rural areas thrive.

We also prioritize education and training, offering resources and support to help our members navigate the complexities of modern agriculture. Our collaborative efforts with other cooperatives and organizations amplify our impact, allowing us to better serve our members and the broader community.

As we plan for the future, we remain dedicated to upholding these cooperative principles. They are the foundation of our organization and the key to our continued success. Together, we can build a resilient and prosperous agricultural community.

Thank you for your unwavering support and commitment to AgHeritage Farm Credit Services.

CUSTOMER SPOTLIGHT:

THE RELUCTANT BEEKEEPER

THE BUZZ BEHIND THE BEES

By Rebecca McGraw

Kathy Kittler's business, The Reluctant Beekeeper began, as you might have guessed, reluctantly.

Kathy already had an operation going, Kittler Land & Cattle, focusing on Hereford and Black Baldy cows and a few registered Texas Longhorns and trophy steers. "I was happy doing cattle," she said. "I was running a fair amount over on my place. But, after we moved out to the Hickory Plains area, one evening I saw a bee swarm by the lake."

Kathy knew her neighbor, Deborah, was a beekeeper. "I called her and said, 'Hey, do you want to come get this big wad of bees?' Debs said, 'Well, I'll come and look at them in the morning before daylight and I'll bring you a bee coat and you can come along.'"

At the time, Kathy had no interest whatsoever in bees. "I was just going to sit in the car and watch her get the bees," she said. "They sting you sometimes, so I was out." But when Deborah showed up the next morning, she brought along a hive as well as the coat.

"I put on the coat and we got the bees," Kathy said. "But then she set them up in a hive at the end of our driveway. I told her, 'These are your bees, you know, go on and take them,' but Debs said, 'I think you'd enjoy watching them come and go.'"

That was three years ago. Kathy felt she already had her days full with cattle, chickens, yardwork and enjoying her grandchildren.

"I wasn't looking for a new hobby," she said. "But my neighbor knew exactly what she was doing. They're amazing little creatures. The more I learned about them, the more impressed I was with how they function."

Kathy found her new hobby fascinating. "The first year I ended with seven hives, after some trial and error. I caught some feral swarms, and ended the second year with 16 hives. I ended this spring with 27 hives," she laughed.

The hobby quickly grew into a business. The Reluctant Beekeeper produces top-quality beeswax lotions, lotion bars and body scrubs, in addition to premium raw honey. Kathy sells her products from the farm, as well as locally at Emily's Flowers & Gifts in Lonoke, M&W Designs in Hazen and at Farmland Meats in Ward.

"I take the honey to sell at gun shows," said Kathy. "That's been fun. My family and friends tell people, so it's a bit of a network for selling honey. I haven't moved yet to online sales. Except for the little shops, it's all sold directly from me. I am almost sold out of last year's honey — I harvested around six hundred pounds from ten hives."

Kathy harvests all the honey herself, taking a gentle approach so as to not alarm the bees. "I take the lid off the hive box and use the smoker. You'll agitate the bees if you lift the whole box, so I lift one frame at a time, and that gives me a minute to walk back to my buggy and brush off the bees. I don't get stung much. I've found that if I talk or sing to them, it keeps me calm, and the bees come check on me and then go back about their business. Everything stays calm and quiet and slow, and they don't mind that nearly as much."

Kathy lets the bees call the shots. "On a typical day, I gather my tools, get my notebook and make my plan, and then I go out to the hive and the bees tell me what I'm going to do. Sometimes it's not what I was planning on doing! The weather does make a difference. The theory is the barometric pressure — if it's over 30, that's a good time to get into the bees, and if it drops, don't do anything with them. Typically if it's sunshiny with a little wind, they like that. They don't like it to be rainy or cloudy or with high winds."

She checks the hives once every two to three weeks, and harvests the honey near the middle or end of summer. If the honeycombs are capped over with beeswax, they are ready. "You have to bring it into an enclosed area to work," Kathy said. "You cannot harvest outside because the bees will find you and take the honey back. I have my little bee shed, I call it my beekeeper headquarters."

Honey harvesting is a hot-weather job. "Most people try to get it about July, but last year mine went on longer, so the last of my honey came off in September. The honey flows better when it's warmer," she said. "The frames go in the extractor and I spin the raw honey out. When it comes out of the extractor, I'll have a strainer on my bucket to catch bits of wax or other impurities, but it's never heated or filtered."

It's important to Kathy that she produce raw honey. "If you go back through folk medicine and history, you will find raw honey is used for burns, cuts, sore throats — it's good for you as a whole with your blood sugar and digestion. It's a miracle food, really. I use honey in my coffee every single morning, and in hot tea. My husband eats it every morning on a waffle; he doesn't eat syrup. A lot of people cook with their honey."

The term "filtered" on a label means the honey has been heated and run through a high pressure filter to remove any traces of pollen.

"That's the big deal about buying and eating local honey from local beekeepers," she said. "I have read that up to 70% of honey in the U.S. chain store market is imported, and processed with heat and ultrafine filters to remove all pollen and traceability. You can't analyze the honey in the grocery store and say 'Hey, I know where this plant pollen came from.' I sell a lot of honey to different people who ask if it's local. I was told by Richard Underhill, an EAS-certified master beekeeper, that you could take the whole state of Arkansas and quarter it, and each quarter would be similar enough to be considered 'local' honey. Here, it doesn't need to be harvested ten minutes from your house for it to be local."

After the honey is harvested, pure beeswax remains. "I started seeing the properties of beeswax," Kathy said. "Before, I never knew that the bees secrete beeswax from their bodies, I had no idea where it came from or thought about it. There's nothing else like it."

The Reluctant Beekeeper beeswax skin care line has proved popular.

“Bees are amazing little creatures. The more I learned about them, the more impressed I was with how they function.”

"Once I started exploring uses for beeswax, I developed solid lotion bars for your skin. I've had people say it cleared up their children's eczema and helped with cracked skin and to fade dark age spots. Then, I branched into the sugar scrubs and beard balms and lip balms. All the products have been wildly and widely received."

For the past two Januaries, Kathy and Deborah have traveled to the annual North American Honey Bee Expo in Louisville, Kentucky. "My whole family and kids have all been so supportive of me over this beekeeping journey," Kathy said. "But, I'm a one-man show on this deal. The family all enjoy it and think it's neat, but they don't want to get into the bees with me."

A customer-owner at the AgHeritage Lonoke Branch, Kathy has found support from them as well.

"Our relationship with AgHeritage has been ongoing from the beginning of our farming adventure. They've always been a good partner to have when acquiring farms or working out new deals. They are not afraid when I have a new idea, and have always been really accommodating and good to work with."

"We've enjoyed having our relationship with Farm Credit," she continued. "They've been really good about including us in their activities, and we've been able to develop friendships with the people and agents at Farm Credit. It's a bit of a friendship-partnership-business-thing working with Farm Credit."

Kathy feels her beekeeping adventure to be a gift from God. "The whole story has been so laid out for me to get to this place in my life, it has nothing to do with me. All this has happened, from choosing the place to build the house to the bees coming in — and my neighbor happens to be a beekeeper — there's no way I could have thought all this up myself."

As a business, The Reluctant Beekeeper is buzzing. "I've been able to transition out of the cattle a bit," she said. "That's what I was doing at my ranch, and I was working and living it daily, much like how the bees are filling my time now. I always felt like, how could I leave? It's a beautiful property, so how could I find something I enjoy as much?"

"So that's why I think it's so fun that the honey bees have come into the picture. This has been such a remarkable transition from doing cattle all the time, to having something I can manage and do right here. I don't have to get in my truck to go do it. I do still have about a hundred cattle over there at the ranch. I go over and check on them, but I have a wonderful couple living there handling that for me so I can work with the bees full-time."

Kathy feels that anyone could benefit from keeping bees, even if they don't plan to harvest the honey. "A lot of people carry bees for agricultural purposes, on trailers to crop fields for the pollination benefits," she said. "Out here where we are, our farming operation is so far away, so I do it just to have the bees. We did plant 160 acres of white clover here, so I think we'll have some really good honey this year."

"My advice to someone interested in getting into beekeeping would be to learn about it first," she continued. "Find a good mentor and learn from their mistakes and take their advice. You need to read and learn before you get bees. The biggest disappointment is when someone wants to get bees, but puts no effort into researching them and taking care of them. It's the greatest when someone gets bees and starts that journey of reading and learning from mentors, on video even, if there's not a local mentor."

"And don't be afraid of getting stung," she laughs. "Because it's going to happen."

2025 ARKANSAS LEGISLATIVE UPDATE

By Scott Sullivan, Farm Credit Government Affairs Liaison

From the steps of the Capitol, here is a view of the legislative front along with legislation that may affect you and your business.

The Regular Session of the 95th General Assembly convened on Monday, January 13, 2025, and finished on April 17 after 94 days. Each session has its own personality and begins crawling, but after a few weeks it starts to walk then it runs wide open. During this session the Senate filed 647 bills, and the House filed 1,005 bills. Governor Sanders signed 1,026 bills into law and vetoed four. Three constitutional amendments will be referred to the voters to vote on in November 2026.

Proposed constitutional amendments that will be referred to the voters to consider are:

SJR 15 - A constitutional amendment that gives local communities, not the state, a powerful tool to attract new jobs, investment, and redevelopment. No state funds are involved.

Arkansas is the only state in our region that does not allow these types of Economic Development Districts. That puts our communities—urban and rural—at a disadvantage when competing for retail, tourism, entertainment, and mixed-use projects. SJR 15 gives local leaders the ability to redevelop areas, revitalize main streets, and help small businesses grow.

The amendment does not create a statewide program, and it does not come with any state mandates. It simply enables local governments to use a tool already proven successful in neighboring states. This is a rare opportunity to empower local leadership without relying on state dollars.

SJR11 – A constitutional amendment to amend the Arkansas constitution, to protect the right to keep and bear arms. This proposal is to affirm that the right to keep and bear arms under the Second Amendment to the U.S. Constitution “is a natural, fundamental, and individual right that shall not be infringed.”

HJR1018 – The citizens-only voting amendment. This proposal is to affirm that only U.S. citizens can vote in Arkansas, which is already the law.

Bills of interest that became laws:

Farm Tax Exemptions and Clarifications House

Bill 1594/Act 621: Rep. DeAnn Vaught (R-Horatio) & Sen. Tyler Dees (R-Siloam Springs) – Creates a farmer sales tax identification card, clearly defines farming and outlines the conditions under which exemptions may be claimed. It emphasizes that sellers can be relieved of liability if they act in good faith. The bill also protects sellers against liability for improperly accepting exemptions.

Income Tax Exemption for Certain Payments by the U.S. Department of Agriculture Senate Bill 408/Act 696: Sen. Blake Johnson (R-Corning) & Rep. Les Eaves (R-Searcy) – Provides an income tax exemption for certain payments made by the United States Department of Agriculture, thereby reducing their tax liability and supporting individuals affected by agricultural downturns and economic challenges stemming from recent crisis situations.

Senate Bill 290/Act 921: Sen. Blake Johnson (R-Corning) & Rep. DeAnn Vaught (R-Horatio) To prohibit a moratorium on the issuance of permits in watersheds and other bodies of water. Senate Bill 290 was amended late in the session to maintain the existing moratorium within the Buffalo River Watershed without the requirement to go through the legislative approval process established by this bill. This provides another layer of protection for farmers and ranchers to make sure they are not harmed by government overreach.

Exempts Certain Agricultural Information from the Freedom of Information Act of 1967 House Bill 1740/Act 585: by Rep. Kendra Moore (R-Lincoln) & Sen. Steve Crowell (R-Magnolia) – Exempts specific agricultural information from the Freedom of Information Act of 1967. This protects records such as certificates of veterinary inspection and personal information related to animal electronic identification tags from public access.

Authorizes the Arkansas Natural Resources Commission to Issue General Obligation Bonds for Certain Projects Senate Bill 421/Act 578: Sen. Bart Hester (R-Cave Springs) & Rep. Howard Beaty (R-Crossett) – Authorizes the Arkansas Natural Resources Commission to issue up to $500 million in general obligation bonds for water management, waste disposal and pollution abatement projects.

Creates an Excise Tax Credit on Certain Beer and Sake Produced Using Arkansas Rice House Bill 1491/Act 874: Rep. Jeff Wardlaw (R-Hermitage) & Sen. Jonathan Dismang (R-Beebe) – Promotes the production of beer and sake utilizing Arkansas rice by creating a tax credit for these products. Producers who report and pay taxes on qualified beer and sake are entitled to a credit against the excise tax.

Updates Regulations for Terminating Oral Leases on Farmland House Bill 1562/Act 941: Rep. Jimmy Gazaway (R-Paragould) – Updates regulations for terminating oral leases on farmlands in Arkansas to simplify the notification process for landlords wishing to end a lease.

Prohibits foreign-controlled businesses from leasing land and holding interests in real property House Bill 1680 / Act 811: Rep. DeAnn Vaught (R-Horatio) & Sen. Blake Johnson (R-Corning) – Prohibits businesses controlled by foreign parties from leasing land and restricts prohibited foreign parties from owning real property or agricultural land under certain conditions. This aims to limit foreign control over land in Arkansas.

INVESTING IN AGRICULTURE, TOGETHER

HOW OUR AGRIBUSINESS TEAM SUPPORTS YOUR SUCCESS

For more than 50 years, AgHeritage has proudly supported agribusiness customer-owners across Arkansas. Several years ago, we built upon that legacy by launching our Agribusiness Department—a dedicated team focused on serving the specialized needs of agribusiness operations that are essential to rural communities.

“We believe AgHeritage offers some of the strongest expertise in production agriculture lending across the state,” said Weston Weeks, Vice President, Capital Markets & Agribusiness.

“Our department was created to provide more complete support to agribusiness customers—like grain elevators, cotton gins and service providers—whose work directly impacts the farmers and communities we serve.”

While many of our branch lenders work closely with row crop and poultry producers, agribusiness operations are often fewer in number and highly specialized. That is where our team comes in—offering customized financing solutions designed for these unique business models.

Thanks to the authority granted under the Farm Credit Act of 1971, Farm Credit Associations are approved to finance both production-focused customers with processing & marketing operations owned by producers, as well as farm-related service providers. This ensures our lending efforts remain focused, relevant and mission-driven.

“We’re not just supporting individual businesses,” Weeks added. “We’re helping support the producers they serve—and the communities they call home.”

Stronger Through Partnership

Collaboration is essential because of the diversity within our agribusiness customer base. Our team works closely with Farm Credit associations across the country to exchange insights and strengthen our shared understanding of the industries we serve.

The Agribusiness Team also manages AgHeritage’s sold and purchased loan portfolio, which benefits from the expertise and best practices of other Farm Credit lenders nationwide—ultimately enhancing the quality of service for our customer-owners here at home.

Our Team, Your Partners

Agribusiness began as a standalone department with Blake Swindle, now AgHeritage Executive Vice President and Chief Operating Officer. The team soon expanded to include:

- Kameela Lee, Portfolio Specialist, who joined from the Accounting Department and plays a key role in managing the purchased loan portfolio while supporting Loan Assistants across the association.
- John David Pieroni, who joined in 2022 and now serves as Agribusiness Officer, collaborating directly with customers and supporting branch lenders.
- Weston Weeks, Vice President, Capital Markets & Agribusiness, who returned to AgHeritage from his family’s agribusiness in 2024 to lead the department.

John David Pieroni

Weston Weeks

"While our team is small on paper, the strength of agribusiness lending at AgHeritage comes from the teamwork across our branches and the support staff in Little Rock," said Weeks.

"We're deeply thankful for that—and even more so for the customer-owners we have the privilege to serve."

Customer Focus: What Drives Us

"By financing an agribusiness, we are not only directly serving that one operation," said John David Pieroni, "but also indirectly supporting our other member-owners and local farming operations. These growers and producers rely heavily on agribusinesses that provide the services essential to their success. The impact our agribusiness customers have on their communities is vital, and it is an honor to play a small part in creating such a significant impact in rural Arkansas and rural America."

"As the Portfolio Specialist, one of the most rewarding parts of my role is learning about our customers, their farming operations and the necessary roles they play in their communities," said Kameela Lee. "I also enjoy helping my team close deals by providing operational support. It's meaningful work, and I'm proud to be part of it."

Thank You for Growing with Us

At AgHeritage, we're proud to walk alongside the agribusinesses that support Arkansas agriculture. We remain committed to delivering trusted expertise, local partnership and meaningful service to every customer-owner.
